In this article, let's look at the key differences between Windows 10 and its instant fathers: Windows 7 and 8/8.1. Don't forget to check how to upgrade to Windows 10 from Windows 7, Windows 8 or Windows 8.1 and Best Windows 10 laptops, tablets, and 2-in-1s home to Microsoft's most loyal and bladed fans. Windows Central team Zach Bowden, senior editor source: Windows Central Zac joined the Windows Central team in 2016, and its main goal is to bring you exclusive coverage for the world of Windows on PCs, tablets and more. He started writing about the leaked Windows 8 builds back in 2011, which eventually led to the creation of a popular build video series tutorial on YouTube that deeply plunged into features close to Microsoft has yet to announce. He is also an avid collector of rare devices, as well as prototype devices that have not been denoyated or cancelled from Microsoft. He's one of several people in the world who owns a surface table in his home, uses the Surface Mini for note-taking, and at one time even used Lumia McLaren and Microsoft Band 3 as his daily phone and smartwatch. Matt Brown, team writer Source: Windows Central Matt started his time in mobile nations in 2016, further scaling the coverage of Windows Central across Xbox One and Windows PCs. It's dedicated to written features, how-how, and other game coverage, and dives deeper into Microsoft's Xbox platform, along with its software and accessories. And from a background of art and graphic design, Matt finds the creative side of every project. While far from writing, Matt catches up on the game's latest releases, or explores the creative side of art and music. Britain was born and raised and naturally a tea lover, and now lives in London. An avid user of Lumia and Surface, Jez discovered the benefits of the Microsoft ecosystem via Xbox, which gradually moved into convergence under the Universal Windows 10 Platform. When J.J. doesn't write about games, he's the most playing them on Xbox. His favorite Xbox franchises include Mass Effect, The Witch, Warcraft, Resident Evil, Battlefield, and Deus Ex, with a side order of Overwatch. Say hello to JSB Xbox Live: J.J. Having worked across all the assets of mobile nations at some point in the years since, he found a home in Windows Central that went into all types of hardware and gaming. Richard comes from the real Lincoln (no, not Nebraska), and never really moved. Away from work today, he enjoys yelling at complete strangers on Xbox Live, flying drones and one day finding enough money to go racing again. Rich Edmunds, team reviewer source: Windows Central Rich first started in mobile nations in 2010 and then actually entices acting editor Dan Rubino via email. Growing up alongside Windows Central as the site eventually became what it is today, Rich now creates content that covers all things PC - whether it's games, hardware, water cooling or software. Before joining Monet's group, Rich was at a SEO agency based in London. There, he was tasked with dealing with computers and office servers, visiting data centers to check the severity of the company connected to the online world, and ensuring that consultants had sufficient access to data before checking in with customers. Rich grew up in a military home and traveled around the world in the early stages of his life, but now travels far and wide in games and online. After building his first computer when he was 13, he continues to develop his skills in the hope that the cyborgs will eventually become a reality. Sean Endicott, news reporter source: Windows Central Sean began contributing to Windows Central in 2017 and became an official part of the team after only a few months. Today it focuses on all the news in microsoft's world. If it activates Windows 10, is done by Microsoft, or affects our audience, it's in it, along with the rest of the news team. Sean also leads our Oculus Quest coverage and reviews Windows 10 apps. When he's not covering news or writing about the latest technology, Sean is a passionate American football fan. He coaches a team in Nottingham, England and even uses Microsoft Teams to share his playbook and learn his game film. Mauro Huculak, contributing how to write a source: The main focus of Windows Central Mauro is to write a comprehensive How-to help users use the most production from Windows 10 and its many related technologies. He has been writing for Windows Central since 2015. He has an IT background, and is a recognized member of the Microsoft MVP community. When Mauro doesn't type a new tutorial, he's always trying to learn something new so he can share it with you. Since then, the hardware has piled up behind it, and there's no shortage of exciting new technology to test and dismantle it. When he's not writing, Kyle enjoys messing with his computer (and, of course, games), reading, playing guitar and drinking coffee. Some of these hobbies continue when it's not winter, but not all. For these three sweet months of The Canadian Summer, it's all about music festivals, cottages, and patios. You will find it knocking out reviews, manuals, editorials, and more. In addition, Brendan proudly serves as a resident halo expert of Windows Central, covering the xbox flagship franchise from a variety of different angles. When he's not working, Brendan probably plays one of his favorite games or reads a good book. There's also a good chance you'll find him working towards completing his degree in professional and digital writing at the University of Auckland. Daniel Rubino, Senior Editor Source: Windows Central Daniel Rubino has been writing about Microsoft since 2007, back when the site was first launched under the banner of WMExperts. In 2010, he took over as editor-in-chief. His responsibilities include team management, content directing, YouTube personality, chief critic, editorial and podcast co-host. Before working on Windows Central, Daniel was a polysynonymographer at Weill-Cornell College of Medicine and NY Presbyterian in New York, projecting film for 17 years, an emergency medical technician in Connecticut, and studying for a PhD in linguistics in language neurology. He attended Siena College, the University of Connecticut, Boston University, and the CUNY Graduate Center with degrees in political science and linguistics. Having lived in Long Island, New York for 13 years, Daniel currently lives in Worcester, Massachusetts. Al Sakho, director of content Source: Windows Central Al Sacco manages all editing operations for Android Central, iMore, and Windows Central, making sure the content trains are running consistently and on time, and always ensuring that all stories meet the high standards loyal readers have come to expect. Before joining Windows Central in 2017 and eventually becoming a future content manager at the end of 2019, Al covered enterprise IT and mobile technologies for IDG, CIO Magazine and CIO.com, and an editorial-assisted path to managing editor for 13 years. He is passionate about reading and writing, eating and drinking (especially coffee and Belgian beer) and the Red Sox. He lives in Boston. Dan Thorpe-Lancaster, Source Editor-in-Chief: The Dan Center joined the Family of Mobile Nations in 2014 as part of the team in the newsroom, and covered all things suitable for printing on Google, Microsoft and Apple. In 2016, Dan took on the top news role for Windows Central, turning to news coverage about the Microsoft ecosystem. In 2020, Dan was appointed editor-in-chief of Windows Central, overseeing content production, planning and strategy. Before joining Mobile Nations and Windows Central, Dan cut his written teeth at the University of Illinois. He graduated in 2013 with a bachelor's degree in English studies and a strong interest in linguistics, rhetoric, and over-analysis of the details of every novel he ever read. Dan grew up in a small town in central Illinois and was addicted to technology at an early age after receiving his first taste of computing from an old Windows 3.1 machine. Dan now lives in eastern Iowa, but hopes to leave the Midwest in a day. Management Team Chris Minck, Director of Commerce And Product Leader Tom Kaminsky, Development Development Manager
